I began learning the piano over 30 years ago, coming into contact with a number of teachers during my years of tuition. I systematically worked through the ABRSM grades (both practical and theory) before then studying for a degree in Music at Christchurch University, Canterbury. It was during this time I began my career teaching at a local Arts College, but soon after took on my own students as a private tutor. Today I teach from my own practise room, as well as travelling to students homes. I also give educational advice to both children and adults relating to musical curriculum and performance. My teaching philosophy is simply that I never teach the same lesson twice; each student learns, adapts and practises at their own pace - I aim to ensure that my students reach their potential and enjoy getting there!
